

WHO WE ARE

The ICC Commission on Corporate Responsibility and Anti-corruption is a leading global private sector body that develops rules of conduct and best practices for fighting corruption and provides world business views on key corporate responsibility and anti-corruption issues.

ICC has taken the lead among business organizations in denouncing corruption and developing rules to combat it. The ICC Rules on Combating Corruption constitute the cornerstone of ICC's anti-corruption work, serving both as a tool for self-regulation by business and as a roadmap for governments in their efforts to fight extortion and bribery. In addition to these flagship ICC Rules, the Commission has developed a suite of crucial anti-corruption tools for companies to use proactively as part of their integrity programmes.

The Commission on Corporate Responsibility and Anti-corruption also provides business with practical instruments to help companies improve their corporate responsibility performance and shapes the development of key standards for corporate responsibility.

The Commission brings together over 300 members from 40 countries, representing multinational companies, law firms, trade associations, and small and medium-sized enterprises.

ICC's voluntary, market-based approaches for fighting corruption and for high standards of responsible business conduct contribute to levelling the playing field for all participants in a global economy.

CURRENT PRIORITIES

- Create guidance on the business case for responsible business conduct, particularly focusing on SMEs, with the new ICC Working Group on Corporate Responsibility.
- Issue ICC Business Integrity Compendium
- Further development of guidance for companies on conflicts of interest.
- Shape G20/Business 20 anti-corruption policy, drawing from ICC's anti-corruption tools as a basis for concrete action by business for fighting corruption.
- Uphold the approach taken by the UN Guiding Principles on business and human rights, with a view to ensuring the balance between the corporate responsibility to respect human rights and the State duty to protect these rights, and provide business views into the UN discussions on a possible international legally binding instrument.
- Provide global business input into international initiatives on corporate responsibility and anti-corruption, including the implementation of the UN Convention against Corruption (UNCAC), the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) Anti-Bribery Convention and the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises.
- Contribute global business views on corporate responsibility reporting.
- Promote the broadest use of the ICC Anti-corruption Third Party Due Diligence Guide for SMEs.
