WHO WE ARE

The ICC Commission on Environment and Energy draws upon a cross-section of business leaders and experts from around the world.

HOW WE WORK

- Membership: Members are nominated by ICC national committees and groups who select ICC members from their territory to serve on the Commission. The Commission is composed of approximately 350 members representing mainly multinational corporations as well as representatives from industry associations, and from ICC national committees that federate ICC members in their countries.

- Agenda: While responding to key policy developments of importance for international business, Commission members and ICC national committees may propose projects and issues for consideration. The Commission addresses major environmental, energy, and climate-change related policy issues of interest to world business by elaborating multi-sectoral business policy recommendations and practical tools to facilitate highlighting business solutions to these issues.

- Leadership: The Commission leadership includes senior corporate executives to drive the work of the Commission and ensure it meets its goals for the wider global business interest.

- Secretariat: The ICC Secretariat manages the initiative and workflow of the Commission working closely with the Commission’s leadership, members and national committees.
